PREFACE.

A few years prior to the destruction of the Public Records of Ireland in 1922, an Irish gentleman was inspired to engage record searchers for the purpose of compiling abstracts from practically every MS. of genealogical interest concerning the Butler families deposited in the ill-fated Public Record Office, Dublin. The result of this long and extremely expensive task was of a happy nature both for himself and posterity—for himself, because he succeeded in establishing his claim to be a direct descendant of the titular Barons of Dunboyne to the satisfaction of the Ulster King of Arms;—for posterity by reason of the fact that all possible genealogical information concerning the Butlers was thereby preserved in spite of the disaster. All the abstracts in question (which run into many thousands) are now in my possession, of which a small, but most valuable, portion forms the contents of this volume.

The surname of Butler originated in the appointment of Theobald Fitz-Walter by King Henry II to the Chief Butlerage of Ireland. This Theobald, who received grants of Upper and Lower Ormonde, became the founder of the illustrious House of Butler of Ormonde, which was destined to play such an important part in the history of Ireland, and he is also rightly claimed as the ancestor of many other distinguished families of the name of Butler. Without a doubt, there are many people of the name living to-day in humble circumstances, who are descendants of one or other of these families. Their origin has been long since forgotten—the effects of the penal laws against Catholics being the cause of their ignorance, in most cases.

Wills are of paramount importance to the genealogist, as they often supply particulars concerning three or more generations of a family. Before the year 1857 wills were proved in the Court of the Bishop within whose Diocese the testator resided. However, if there happened to be effects to the value of five pounds in more than one Diocese, the will was proved in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Armagh.

This volume contains 99 per cent. of the Diocesan and 83 per cent. of the Prerogative wills. I decline to be responsible for the spelling of Irish place-names, which are generally left as spelt in the original documents.

My sincere thanks are due to all subscribers; to Bryant O. Butler, Esq., of Easton, U.S.A., for special financial support; and to James Reidy, Esq., for help in perusing the proofs as they passed through the press.

WALLACE CLARE.

March, Cambs.
